the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are illiterate has increased from 1.2 billion to 1.5 billion.

There are many reasons for this. One is that the population of the world is growing so fast that the number of children who are illiterate is increasing. Another reason is that the number of people who are illiterate is increasing in many countries, especially in the developing world. This is because many of these countries do not have enough schools or teachers to teach all the children who are of school age.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they do not have enough money to go to school. In many countries, the cost of education is very high, and many families cannot afford to send their children to school. This is especially true in the developing world, where the cost of education is often a significant portion of a family's income.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they do not have enough time to go to school. In many countries, the school year is very short, and many children have to work to help support their families. This is especially true in the developing world, where many children are needed to help with the household or to work in the fields.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they do not have enough interest in learning. In many countries, the education system is not very good, and many children do not like to go to school. This is especially true in the developing world, where the education system is often outdated and does not provide a good quality of education.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they do not have enough access to education. In many countries, there are not enough schools or teachers, and many children do not have a chance to go to school. This is especially true in the developing world, where the education system is often very limited.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they do not have enough resources to learn. In many countries, there are not enough books or other learning materials, and many children do not have a chance to learn. This is especially true in the developing world, where the education system is often very limited.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they do not have enough motivation to learn. In many countries, the education system is not very good, and many children do not see the value of learning.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they do not have enough support from their families. In many countries, the families do not value education, and many children do not have a chance to go to school. This is especially true in the developing world, where many families are poor and do not have the resources to support their children's education.

Compliance

We want your promotional gifts and giveaways to make an impact for all the right reasons. Every care is therefore taken to ensure all our products are safe to use, so you can distribute them with confidence. By meeting relevant compliance standards, we make sure every item is produced in a way that upholds your good reputation.

All our products comply with prevailing EU legislation, of which we want to highlight some important regulations that are connected to our main product categories:

- REACH on concerned products which stands for the Registration, Evaluation, Authorisation and Restriction of Chemicals.
- Cadmium level restriction regulations.
- WEEE which stands for Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment.
- RoHS II which stands for Restriction of Hazardous Substances.
- Food contact material regulations that provide the legislative framework for food contact products.
- Formaldehyde level restriction regulations for example for timber products.
- PCP level restriction regulations for example for timber products.

Please note that the legislation mentioned above will not be further featured at individual product level on the pages in this catalogue.

The full compliance overview can be found on page 96-97.

THE CABLE CONNECTION OF THE FUTURE

USB Type-C is the new industry standard connector and cable used for power and connectivity. This USB-C connector looks similar to a micro USB connector, but is smaller and can transfer up to 10 Gbps of data with more power output of up to 100W. Being bi-directional it can either send or receive power, and because the connectors are the same on both ends, you won't have to flip the connector to plug in. You can connect different devices, charge smartphones, or use it as a powerful port to connect all peripherals. To ensure compatibility a device needs to have an incorporated Type-C port or use adapters that make Type-C hosts and devices work with other existing USB devices.
